

They divide the nation with their love it or hate it taste. To some, they are the king of meat products and the perfect accompaniment to a pint; for others they're the lowest of the edible low. But pork pies are a British culinary institution and a group of men in Ripponden, near Halifax, has spent more than 25 years giving them the recognition they deserve.

These dedicated connoisseurs are members of the Pork Pie Appreciation Society, which meets every Saturday night in Ripponden's Old Bridge Inn. For more than two decades they have stoically 6691 The group at the pub, including the man in the top photo, who is the author's brother-in-law. The photo was taken by the author's brother-in-law, who is the man in the top photo.

© 2008 Yorkshire in December 2008. All rights reserved. This document is the property of Yorkshire in December 2008. It is not to be reproduced, stored in a retrieval system, or transmitted in any form or by any means, electronic, mechanical, photocopying, recording, or by any information storage and retrieval system, without the prior written permission of Yorkshire in December 2008.

